Above is the attachment I have attached. Please help me. A: try `$img = imagecreatefromstring($raw);` You've also got the HEAD and BODY as separate entities in your string. `.png){width="5.3cm"} \ Fig. \[entr\]` illustrates the intracycle timing of the transcriptional and post-transcriptional processes that are analyzed and reported in this paper. The colored boxes represent: time of the mechanical vibration with $f_m = 200$ Hz, the mechanical vibration with $f_m = 800$ Hz, the electrical vibration with $f_e = 200$ Hz, the electrical vibration with $f_e = 800$ Hz, the laser pulse duration t_p , the exposure time of the CCD, and the mechanical rotation with speed v_r . The variations of fluorescence over time are shown in green and the variations of absorbance over time in blue. The fluorescence and absorbance levels are extracted from a segmentation of the time courses in blue and green rectangles, respectively. `![[Intracycle time line of the transcriptional and post-transcriptional processes analyzed in this paper.]{data-label="entr"}{width="10cm"}]` The intracycle time line of the fluorescence and absorbance dynamics (Fig. \[laser\]) show that the first laser pulse (with intensity I_L) rapidly irradiates the cell and starts the transcription of the gene tagged with the red fluorescent protein (RFP) labeled with the fluorophore Alexa-568. The fluorescence measured by the CCD starts to be registered at the end of the pulse (at time t_p) and its dynamics remain below the noise threshold until the end of the second laser pulse (at time $t_p + t_d$). The second laser pulse is blocked by an opaque shutter (not shown) during the exposure time (t_e). As expected, the fluorescence intensity decreases due to the down regulation of the RFP protein. The concentration of Alexa-568 decreases because of the dilution of the fluorescent dye in the cytoplasm, as a consequence of the metabolism of the cell. However, since I'm really bad at learning skills, that list is probably getting longer every day. So, I decided that instead of trying to learn all of the emojis, I would instead find a bunch of them. If I decided to do it again, however, I'll be sure to actually learn some of these before I do it again. How To Use The Android Emoji Much Ado About Emojis Part 1. Emojis in HPUX - The full Emoji support in HPUX is the result of enhancements made to the HPUX 9 operating system. The support for HPUX 9 is not included in all versions of the Linux operating system, so it is important to know what HPUX 9 includes before investigating the features and specifications for Emojis in HPUX. Emoticons | Emoji | Emojis And so, here are some we never thought would make it into the Emoji Set and some which I think will never get around to using. Sometimes we don't even know what the emoji is so we just guess. Emoji Glossary Repost: The updated emoji support in HPUX 9 features an updated set of Unicode Emoji, and various technical improvements including support for wider emoji sets. A better note-taking app for Android. Take notes, and optionally have them automatically saved in the cloud or on your Android device using the new Emoji keyboard.
