These were some of the web pages on which I had performed Google search. But only one answer came back. So I am writing this blog, to tell you that the answer to your question isnt Google, but Wikipedia. I met that solution only after searching and studying the relevant material in Wikipedia, a wikisource. (albeit a copy in Google itself. I didnt even have to leave my internet cafe, because the resources and answers to all my questions were in Google itself. When my family was searching for the best book on Geography, I came across this same question here. He even had the links. But in my opinion the best resource to search for the answer was a wikisource. However he didnt. Instead he left the room and closed the door. I dont think that just being a wiki source prevented him from getting his answer. He used the right resource. But I guess his family might have searched for an answer and then left the question unanswered. Think about it. In one day you are willing to leave the room and close the door for the family. I am not sure, if he had even started looking for the answer or not. I think he had actually opened up to the idea that his family might want to get an answer and he left the room. But I dont know. I only know that he didnt leave. Not unlike the question I got as a college student. I left the room for the answer, but I never closed the door. This book is my answer to the question and here it is.
