The complications of primary biliary cirrhosis (PBC) may result in significant hospital utilization, especially in the initial stages of the disease, and the medical care of patients with this disease is costly in the United States. The average direct costs to the payer in the first year following diagnosis were estimated to be $10,789, compared to an average of $9,900 for controls. Medical costs were found to be higher than expected in both groups, while hospital costs were less than expected and outpatient physician costs were no different than in the control group. Hospitalizations were more common in the PBC group during the year following diagnosis. The results of this study indicate that the cost of PBC to the payer is significant and may contribute to the costs incurred by the patient.Thanks. From:

pro creator, pro 32/64, x86/64, multilingual - Softs.ch. Publication Trends Abstract While the Internet has seen a great deal of change, the medical Web is still in its infancy. This progress is hindered because medical information is generally produced in a specialized and narrow manner, for example in a table format. This creates an obstacle for users who want to find and access the information. Currently, there are no commercial or open source tools available that can "unclutter" tables so that patients can locate the medical information they need. For instance, some "normal" tissues may have a picture, while others might have a table with rows and columns and cells. In addition, other tissue types may be very large or small, and there is no easy way to group them together. Furthermore, if a particular row or cell contains information of interest to patients, it is often necessary to narrow the search to only that data entry
