A human-based navigation tool created using Microsoft Excel. It is a powerful database, which will help you find the directions from one place to another. It does not have much of a specific destination goal since it doesn't know what you need to go to, what type of navigation you need, etc. so it's meant more as a utility application. It should be used when you want something which works as well as a dead reckoning device works, but you don't have access to GPS. Excel becomes your personal Highway Pilot. Navigate the freeways of the world with no traffic jams and no need to pay tolls! HyperNav uses Microsoft Excel to create hyper-detailed 3D maps of the US Interstate and US State Highway Network. You can see the traffic volume, typical driving speeds, and even the number of cities passed on each route. For each route, the display includes: - A list of every city on the route, with driving directions. - A marker showing your current route in the world. - Alternative routes for any one section of the route. - The income generated from the route. - For profitable routes, the total time required. HyperNav uses data from the Federal Highway Administration's website. The main driver of this project was a World War II
