Founded in 2004, we have grown to be one of the biggest Japanese game development companies in the industry. Our work includes a wide variety of game and manga formats, including mobile games, web games, arcade games, social games, console games, PC games, and console ports of PC games. We specialize in transforming the worlds of animation and anime into games to be enjoyed not only in Japan but around the world. Our products are already set in motion, including a massively popular PC game—"World End Economica"—the world of which is widely famous for its complex yet innovative universe, set in a future world devastated by the recession of the world economy. We are currently developing "Oceanhorn 2", a fantasy action adventure game. I'm happy to have such an amazing development team, and I am working hard to continue the development process. If you enjoy the game please check out our latest video— ABOUT VANILLAAMERICA INC.: Established in 2008, VanillaAmerica Inc. is a game developer based in Osaka, Japan. However, when Google did demo KitKat in September at I/O, it did come with a hidden Easter egg. Its, naturally, the ability to hide the Play Store icon. Well it's the same thing over here in the UK and Android users in the US have already been able to enjoy the feature. But it's a bit more robust than the US version, so we've been after HTC to bring us a version for our home shores. The feature is enabled by changing a setting within the Play Store app - under "Account Settings" a checkbox has been added to add new accounts. We've been given access to the latest firmware and have been playing around with it, and it seems to work smoothly. The icon becomes a little greyed out, with only an up icon to indicate that the app has been successfully added. To enable the feature you need to remove your Google account from the phone, so long as you have any payment details - but then you can add it again with all of that and other data saved from your previous account. It's likely to be the first of many new features and customisations which come to the Play Store with KitKat - it's been confirmed that Google is planning to release "up to a dozen new features and bff6b2d33
