This article was formerly on Wikibooks, but was moved there because it was a very new and unfinished article. Contents This article describes Photoshop Elements and its features, along with little background information on the software for people who are learning how to use the software. It is written from a photographer's perspective. History and development Photoshop Elements is the successor of Photoshop Panoramic. The first version was a free update to Photoshop Albums. It was released on August 17, 2006 in the United States and Canada. The project was created by nine employees from Adobe. As of May 8, 2009, there are less than 100 people registered as active members of the Photoshop Elements team.[1] Photoshop Elements was initially only available for use on Mac, Windows and Linux. It uses a proprietary file format (PSE), which means that only software on the Adobe Creative Suite of products can use or view it. In September 2012, however, Adobe announced a version of Photoshop Elements for iOS.[2] The iPad version was released in June 2013.[3] Adobe released Photoshop Elements for Android in February 2015.[4] The release for Android Tablet was released in September 2015.[5] Description Photoshop Elements is a free application that lets you edit photographs and create graphics, such as digital posters and panoramas. Q: (Laravel 5.4) How to use cache for page render time? I want to use cache for page render time.
But Laravel 5.4 cache for page render time not working. I googled for the solution but failed. My 'prefixClearRegexp' => false,],], 'backupGlobals' => false, 'backups' => ['error' => 'default',], 'prefix' => '',]; I want use cache in my first page. A: You can use code like:

if(Cache::has('name_of_file')) return Cache::get('name_of_file'); return Response::make($file, 200); A: It's not a good practice to use cache for page render time because PHP will detect that in the page render time and will not create cache. The best way is to use it in a section of the application instead of whole application. Entries in disney park (2) The Disney Parks Blog over
