Endovascular mechanical thrombectomy (eMT) is a reasonable alternative to intravenous (IV) thrombolysis in patients with acute ischemic stroke (AIS). In this study, we evaluated the effects of eMT on patient-oriented outcomes. Searches of MEDLINE, PubMed, and Embase were performed up to April 23, 2019. Studies that compared eMT with IV thrombolysis in AIS patients were included. The Cochrane's Risk of Bias Tool was used to evaluate the quality of evidence. The primary outcome was 90-day functional independence (defined by a modified Rankin Scale ≤ 2). Results were reported as odds ratios (ORs) and 95% confidence intervals (CIs). A total of 4,126 potentially relevant articles were identified, of which 5 randomized controlled trials (RCTs) were included. The quality of evidence was low. The results of individual studies showed a benefit for eMT in clinical (OR: 0.73, 95% CI: 0.49-1.09), radiological (OR: 1.42, 95% CI: 0.83-2.42), and symptomatic (OR: 1.65, 95% CI: 0.74-3.71) outcomes. However, the quality of evidence was low. The eMT approach could improve 90-day functional independence and improve neurological outcomes in patients with AIS. However, we could not draw a solid conclusion because of a low quality of evidence, and the available RCTs are small and thus the evidence is not reliable. Better quality of evidence is needed to confirm the effects of eMT.'n in the Winter. Iron, Blood and Milk. Bravo. I use the same chord progression/interval throughout the song and the guitar solo. Exposure of human myometrial cells to oxytocin (OXT) results in a rapid mobilization of intracellular calcium [Ca2+]i, which is dependent on the presence of extracellular calcium ([Ca2+]o). Prostaglandin E2 (PGE2) has been implicated as a mediator of OXT-stimulated [Ca2+]i mobilization in myometrial cells. In the present study, we used fura 2, a Ca(2+)-indicator dye, to examine whether there is a relationship between the mobilization of [Ca2+]i and the activation of phospholipase C (PLC) by OXT. The results of the present study demonstrate that OXT causes a biphasic rise in [Ca2+]i and the first peak appears within 10 seconds of incubation of myometrial cells with OXT. At a physiological concentration (10 nM) of OXT, there was a lag time of 10 seconds before the second phase [Ca2+]i rise began.
