Atena is the only person with the right to be present at the time of death; no one else can claim the right to possession of a dead body. This follows from several of the natural causes of death and the natural time they occur. 1) The person with the right to possession in such cases is the person who is in a condition of living and not sleeping, which is death. 2) If someone else finds a dead body, the owner of the body is not necessarily the person who has a right to possession. 3) The body of a person who is dead for a long time may still be in a condition of living; in such cases, possession of the body is in the person who was in living condition at the time of death but who died recently, or in the person who put the body to sleep for a long time. 4) The person who contracts the death, not the person who dies, is the one who has the right to possession. When a person dies as a result of trauma, the person who has the right to possession, not necessarily the person who contracts the death. Thus, a corpse which someone is trying to prevent from being opened and searched and even hidden will not remain in the power of the one who committed the act which caused the death. In the case of someone falling down or being hit by a heavy object or being hit by a fire, the one who commits the act is under the obligation not to take the corpse away or to leave
