the development kit is the biggest tool, the one which increases the overall quality of medal of honor above and beyond what most would have expected. i'm not the best when it comes to the korean war, but i do believe i understand what they are trying to say here. with one exception, it is quite easy to differentiate the american vets from the korean vets. the stories they have to tell are different, though the two groups are not mutually exclusive. when i ask a korean vet if he fought with american troops, he swears that he does not, claiming that the u.s. soldiers are merely "very good friends" of his and that any sort of enemy collaboration is to be avoided at all costs. some of them decide to join the israeli army and others decide to go back to civilian life. i'm not an expert with this subject, but the more i ask the more i can see that there is a distinct difference in views about the war. for instance, major gary of the 507th used to hate being called a hero, but in the war memorials in the us that he visited he saw a testimony from his friends that showed they knew he was a hero to them. another example. as i read the letters that the korean war vets who participated in the organization "cloud of courage" send to the american president, i noticed that many of them are fighting for the victims, not for the victors. they believe that there will be no fairness in this war. after all, they have already lost their young ones, now their daughters. they don't want to see young girls put to death. the part that made it clear to me that they didn't necessarily see them as enemies was when a group from the us veterans who fought in korea and were involved in a falling out went to fight in cambodia. one of them read the letter that explained why they fought there, and he explained that he did it because he saw his friends die. in some of the korean vets i spoke with, that letter not only made sense, but it was also the reason why they were fighting. they were fighting for their friends. personally, i think that the vets from the korean and viet nam have a lot more in common than anyone thought. we can't assume that one group is either more moral or more responsible than the others and that they just happen to be fighting for different reasons. we should be careful not to make that assumption. i won't go into detail about it because i still don't know that much, but i believe that a certain percentage of both groups are in favor of the current situation, or at least of the current government. while i don't want to enter the discussion about it, i think that we should be very careful not to blame them because they did what they were asked to do: what they were told to do, by their government. they didn't want to fight, but they were told to fight. now we know why they did it. 5ec8ef588b
